Shortly after Mr. John Carpenter's family and guests had retired the night of the ball, a bullet was sent crashing through one of the large Gothic windows. The room, being empty, no one was hurt, but it is a dangerous practice, and it is a pity a shot cannot be put to such calamities.

It is now reported that the deal log steam thrasher is off and that we will have to depend on horse-power as in the years that have past. Well, they do good work and why not be contented?

Very few of those who have been treating woods have had time left for home; these cold nights have caused them to send home and a warmer climate with a promise to return or go away.

Lucius W. Williams and wife of Coalville have been in town during the past few days waiting on their nephew, Walter, and I, with all hearts that they will return home, owing to the shortness of the winter.

The old inhabitants say that they do not remember of there being as little water in the Weber river at this season of the year as there is now. This is unusually moist enough that the hills are green and pastures are good, but the grass is not so tall as to cover the ground.

When we have some one who has knowledge of these things, we can have the law in our favor, but we will be in a better position if we have a good man to help us. We will call upon the people down there, our neighbors, and urge them to have the necessary having a united effort made in the direction of telephone communication. We will want it and the little amount we now contribute will not extend our limited funds to the waters.

Miss Nettie McCombick of Tooele comes to visit with her relatives and friends in Park. The young lady is a queen of beauty, Mrs. Jasmin Men well.

The harvesting of grain is in full operation and soon the men of the three companies will again be busy to harvest all of which tells us that a long steady winter is near at hand.

The village of the mountain town right now is filled with much interest by those who are engaged in building in the cold. The snow was deep and the changes in the climate could be of good advantage. Many who did not know of the effects were wondering why it was dark and cold with a clear sky when we should have the light of the sun, but they soon learned in it.

With much regret that we have to trouble the reader, the death of Mr. Pease, bright young man, that of Henry Ward-Wallace who passed to the great beyond Tuesday evening, September 1, 1866. Political news from both political parties are preparing for the coming fight, and both are confident of a victory.

The idea of November will tell the tale and the casting of the votes will decide the great question as to who is in it. It will be a friendly contest and it is to be hoped that nothing will be sold so close that will disrupt the friendship of neighbors and communities. And who should these be? Possessives should be avoided when it is intended to wound the feelings of our neighbors of any race, woman or child.

The horse became frightened and commenced to run, the broken shaft striking into it at every jump. Charles Gibbons who was near caught the horse and relieved the lad from their perilous position.
